*Living Inside Your Story The perspective of your poem is told in first person using your own storytelling voice to narrate the tale. You share through the story who you are, what you felt, and what these events or situations means for you in such a personal way that it acts as a "conduit" for viewers to engage in their own very real and emotional experience. Rather than a detached telling that this happened and that happened, viewers experience you living inside this story. Your story is shared through the heart, NOT the head.	10
